IN SEARCH OF

Fifty years after their debut, corporate matching gift programs continue to evolve.

When Philip Reed, chair of General Electric's board of directors, introduced the first-ever matching gift program in 1954, it's unlikely that he or anyone else could have foreseen the impact his idea would have on the philanthropic landscape. In the program's first year, the GE Foundation matched nearly $200,000 in employee gifts to higher education—a success by any measure. Since then, thousands of companies have contributed billions of dollars to education and other nonprofits via corporate matches. Reed's idea, so novel for its time, stemmed from his desire to see GE employees support their alma maters. He believed his employees would be more likely to give to colleges and universities if the company matched their gifts and that such gifts ultimately would benefit the company because they would help create a better-educated work force.

Over time, the matching gift concept evolved into a widespread practice that showcases companies' efforts to be socially responsible, improves employee relations, promotes broad-based philanthropy and makes giving flexible. Although matching gifts generally represent a small fraction of an institution's overall gift income, they can add up to hundreds of thousands—or even millions—of dollars those institutions otherwise would not have received. According to data compiled by the Council for Aid to Education for its annual Voluntary Support of Education survey, participating colleges and universities received $163.5 million in corporate matching gifts in fiscal year 2003 alone.

Loyola Welcomes a New Neighbor

Loyola Law School has a new neighbor: Belmont Primary Center #11. This K–2 facility mimics Loyola's campus, with its eye-catching colors and sharp angles. Built by the Los Angeles Unified School District (LAUSD) to reduce overcrowding, it will house over 500 students.

Neatly sandwiched on two acres between Blaine and Albany Streets, Belmont Primary is built on a formerly vacant lot created by fires set during the LA Riots. Within its two stories and 33,790 square feet are 16 technology-friendly classrooms, a library, a nurse's office, a multi-purpose community room, speech and physical therapy rooms and administrative offices. The building's exterior is bordered by landscaping and new sidewalks, and the courtyard includes a playground and a grass playfield.

Some of the school's features really stand out: students will lunch outside under a huge awning; a skylight floods the auditorium with natural light; kindergartners have a private play yard with a tricycle track! The campus is high-tech, with lots of computers and closed-circuit and regular TVs. Classroom sensors read temperature and humidity, and adjust the air conditioning. Ceiling lights turn on and off according to the amount of incoming daylight, and turn off completely when rooms are empty.

Later this fall, Loyola will welcome yet another new neighbor—a housing complex and childcare center will go up at Albany and James M. Wood Boulevard.

Belmont Primary is a welcome addition to the area. "We are delighted to have as our new neighbor Belmont Primary Center #11," said Dean David W. Burcham '84. "This is a neighborhood on the move and having another educational institute makes it even better."

Matching gift programs have long suffered from a relative lack of visibility and widespread perceptions that they require lengthy and complicated processing—in other words, that they're almost more trouble than they're worth.

However, most firms and companies have streamlined the process to include convenient online or paper matching gift claims.

Matching gift programs are a valuable source of funding to the Law School. Our goal is to increase funding from matching gifts but it can't happen without a donor initiating the process

Thank you to the thousands of alumni and friends who chose to make a gift to Loyola Law School this year. I am continuously amazed by your generosity, as we work to strengthen our faculty, academic programs, student body and overall reputation.

While our successes this year are very encouraging, there is still work to be done.
